Barahoti Pass (4700 mtr)

A Hidden Gem of the Himalayas

Tucked away in the pristine landscapes of Chamoli, Uttarakhand, Barahoti Pass (approximately 4,700 m / 15,420 ft) is one of the Himalayas' most peaceful and lesser-known high-altitude destinations. Located near the India-Tibet (China) border, this vast alpine meadow is surrounded by snow-clad peaks, crystal-clear streams, and untouched wilderness, offering a truly unique Himalayan experience. Unlike crowded tourist spots, Barahoti is a place where silence, nature, and breathtaking mountain views come together. It's a dream destination for explorers, photographers, and anyone seeking the raw beauty of the Himalayas.

Chhojan (4738 mtr)

Where the road ends, but the adventure begins.

Imagine riding deep into the high Himalayas, where the road slowly disappears and the landscape turns wild and untouched. The journey towards Chhojan is not just a ride—it is a test of endurance, courage and the love for the mountains. With every turn, the air becomes thinner, the mountains rise higher, and the sound of the motorcycle engine echoes through the vast Himalayan valley. Crossing rugged tracks, streams and high-altitude meadows, a rider feels completely connected with the raw wilderness. At Chhojan, near the Tibetan frontier, the feeling is beyond words. Snow-covered peaks, endless open landscapes and the silence of the Himalayas create a moment that every adventure rider dreams of experiencing.
